Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicant's arguments are not persuasive.

Applicant failed to substantively address the provisional double patenting rejection.

Applicant argued that Bracho, Jacobs, and de Vries, or any combination thereof, failed to disclose a resource request to be published is received at a first user node of the network from one of the user nodes through a direct connection. Applicant argued no information was transmitted through direct connections between user nodes. Applicant failed to explicitly define the terminology of a "direct connection" or provide a definition for one of ordinary skill in the art to use; therefore the broadest reasonable interpretation of a connection must be applied when examining the claim language. None of the cited references explicitly stated that any connection performed was required to be made through a router, server, or other connecting entity or device; therefore the references cover any type of connection between computers including direct connections. Applicant never explicitly stated that a connection was required to be made directly with another machine, and further failed to suggest how that direct connection could be implemented. Using the broad definition of a direct connection since no definition was provided by Applicant and no suggestion was provided by Applicant to indicate the breadth and scope of a direct connection within the specification, and further based on Applicant's own piecemeal analysis of the references, data was received at a user node of the network from another user node of the network through a direct connection.

Applicant argued that Bracho, Jacobs, and de Vries, or any combination thereof, failed to disclose determining whether to send the resource request to a publish-subscribe server node or to send the resource request to another of the user nodes. Applicant admitted that Bracho sent events and advertisements to the subscriber user node. When the request was sent in Bracho, it was determined whether to send the resource request to a publish-subscribe server node or to send the resource request to another of the user nodes. The determination was made by Bracho to send the resource request to another user node. Applicant's claim language is fulfilled by Bracho. Applicant could overcome this claim language barrier by rewording the language in the determining phrase to eliminate the "or" provision and finding an alternate way of stating Applicant's intended claim scope.

Applicant argued that Bracho, Jacobs, and de Vries, or any combination thereof, failed to disclose the resource request is forwarded from the firrst user node or another user node, or a transmitting interface performing said forwarding. Jacobs addressed the need for forwarding any type of data resulting from a request. Jacobs taught the concept of forwarding, which added to the combination of Brach, Jacobs, and de Vries to allow for forwarding any type of data in the server system. Forwarding data from a request is a step beyond forwarding the request, therefore making the forwarding of the request obvious. Such a request and forwarding of it is also found in any storage area network reference in publication.
